German Neoliberalism in the Interwar Period

The roots of German neoliberalism can be traced back to the interwar period. In the aftermath of World War I, Germany was a country in crisis. The German economy was devastated, and the Weimar Republic was struggling to maintain its stability.

In this context, a group of German economists and intellectuals began to develop a new economic ideology that they believed could solve Germany's problems. These economists, who included Walter Eucken, Wilhelm Röpke, and Ludwig von Mises, argued that the free market was the best way to achieve economic growth and prosperity.

German neoliberals also argued that the state should play a limited role in the economy. They believed that government intervention in the market would only lead to inefficiency and stagnation.

The ideas of German neoliberals gained traction in the 1930s, as the world economy spiraled into depression. Many people began to see neoliberalism as a possible solution to the economic crisis.
