Unveiling the Past

With the Bur Oak Guide's Projectile Point Guide in hand, you'll embark on a journey through time, discovering the stories behind the artifacts you encounter.

Paleo-Indian Points: The Earliest Hunters

As the glaciers receded some 10,000 years ago, the Upper Mississippi River Valley became a hunting ground for Paleo-Indian peoples. Their distinctive projectile points, such as the Clovis and Folsom, were crafted from high-quality stone and designed for maximum penetration.

Archaic Points: A Diverse Toolkit

The Archaic period, spanning thousands of years, saw a proliferation of projectile point designs. From the stemmed Dalton points to the notched Kirk points, these artifacts reflect the diverse hunting strategies and environmental adaptations of the era.

Woodland Points: Complex Societies Emerge

During the Woodland period, Native American societies grew in complexity and developed intricate ceremonial traditions. Projectile points, such as the Snyders and Madison points, took on symbolic meanings and were often found in ritual contexts.

Mississippian Points: A Golden Age of Culture

The Mississippian period witnessed the rise of complex societies, such as the Cahokia civilization. Their projectile points, including the Maud and Arrowhead Lake points, were not only utilitarian but also emblems of power and status.
